A Short History of Blackgang Chine

Phase 1: The Start

In 1842 Alexander Dabell bought land at Blackgang 150m above the sea. By the next year he had built paths so that people could enjoy the gardens and the view along the coast to The Needles and beyond. Steps were built so people could marvel at the chine from the beach. Only about 50 people lived in the area so it seemed wild and exotic. Then Alexander Dabell heard that a whale had landed on the beach at the Needles. He bought it, sold the blubber and had the skeleton cleaned. The skeleton was then put together and placed in the gift shop for people to walk through. This is what

Victoria built Osborne House for her family holidays. This made the Island the perfect place to holiday and most of the kings and queens of Europe came at some point. At this time Alexander's wife Amelia played a big part in making sure that Blackgang Chine provided the things that rich families liked to see and do when on holiday. Very quickly, visiting Blackgang Chine became something everyone did when they came to the Isle of Wight. After 1865 railways made it quicker and cheaper to come to the Island, so more people visited and holiday towns like Sandown, Shanklin and Ventnor increased in size very quickly.

Phase 3: After World War One

Just like the last phase, unrest in Europe made travel dangerous so the Island was again a safe place to holiday, but because it was an island, it felt like going abroad. It was in the 1930s that Bruce Dabell used his brilliant imagination to add to Blackgang Chine all the things we have come to expect when we visit a theme park. For example there were the funny mirrors, giant models and floodlights so that it could be enjoyed after dark. It was these ideas that shaped famous theme parks in America that came later.

Phase 4: The late Twentieth Century

In the 1960s most people were getting richer and buying things like cars. They could use them to go on holiday and new drive on/off ferries made the Isle of Wight easy and cheap to get to. These were the boom years for Blackgang Chine and almost every year a new attraction opened: The Crooked House, Adventureland, Dinosaurland, Fairy Castle, Nurseryland, Frontierland and Smugglerland. In the 1970s space exploration was a really big thing so there was even a flight simulator. Blackgang Chine is still owned by the Dabell family and today it is Simon who is guiding it to greater things.
